Omar's case study*

Omar is starting out on his own in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and he wants to be responsible. He has a steady job with benefits, a studio apartment, and a used car his uncle gave him. He understands that insurance may help minimize some financial risks, but he can't afford to purchase every policy he wants within his budget. He has determined that he can spend up to $2,150 per year on premiums. After doing some careful research to figure out which choices would be best for him at this point in his life, here's what Omar decided.

Life happens

The table below details specific things that happened to Omar during the year.

Month	What happened?	Which insurance would cover this?	Did Omar have coverage?	How much will Omar have to pay? (If he has insurance, what is his copay or deductible?)
January	Omar got sick and visited the doctor. Without insurance, the appointment cost $120 and the antibiotics cost $110.		☐ Yes
March	Omar slipped on an icy sidewalk while carrying groceries and had to get stitches in the emergency room. Without insurance, the procedure cost $250.		☐ Yes ☐ No
July	A kitchen fire in the apartment next door caused the sprinkler system to activate in Omar's apartment as well. His couch, his bed, his television, and his bookcase were ruined. The cost of the damage was $2,500.		☐ Yes ☐ No

Summarize the costs

Based on the insurance coverage Omar had in place, how much did he have to spend himself? How much more would it have been if he didn't have any insurance (including copays, deductibles, and the premiums)?

Consider insurance in your life

Life is full of surprises. Insurance is there to help us when things go wrong. What types of unexpected life events (illness, accident, surgery, natural disaster, dental emergency, etc.) have happened to you or to your family or friends in the past year that may have caused a financial burden? Which types of insurance coverage would be most helpful to protect people in these instances?

Omar gives advice

Imagine that Omar's cousin is getting ready to graduate and start his first job in a new town. After meeting with his new employer, he's asked Omar for advice on whether or not insurance is worth the cost. Prepare a response as if you're Omar, giving general advice about the important role insurance can have on a person's financial life. Include at least two examples from Omar's experiences.
